

Thanks For The Input!

Saturday, July 12, 2008 at 2:42pm

I've gotten loads of ideas for tattoo locations. One particularly cool one was from Jon: As for skin that doesn't stretch, I can only think of one place: your skull. Shave it all off, start the tat just below the nape of your neck and spiral it up to the top of your head (travelling the circumference once or twice, however long it takes). When the hair grows back, you'll at least have the beginning of the phrase just above your collar line, but it'll be hidden. When you wanna be deep and philosophical, shave your head, and bam. Too bad that I'm going bald, so that can't work. =)

I really like Karine's idea of a vertical tattoo on my lateral muscle (side of torso, under my armpit), and something either across the top of my back, along the spine, or in a clump behind my shoulder.

I've discovered two things. First, a silly tidbit, is that I tend to get along well with anyone who listens to Radiohead, and perhaps a little less with those who do not. Second, and way cooler, was that I realized that an awesome motivational speaker I had listened to in Halifax, exclusively for our small Jazz band, could have been Tony Robbins. Holy Crap! It just struck me this morning. I'll try to look into it some more, but I'm convinced.

In other news, I've had a wicked conversation till very late at the village hang-out a few nights ago, with Juanilama locals. We talked about world politics, astronomy, economics, Canada, Costa Rica, animals, women =), religion, climate change, racism, crime and punishment. These guys crave to learn everything they can. They're fascinated by everything. I wish I knew how to share their enthusiasm with some people at home...

My next blog will partly pertain to why I would like to undertake a program to incite curiosity and a thirst for knowledge in children in the public school system.

Michael Leukert at 9:39pm July 12

"...a program to incite curiosity and a thirst for knowledge in children in the public school system."

hm. we are all born very curious, without any fears or laziness, and genuinely willing to be selfless. its only in the first few years of life, and then growing up through childhood and adolescence that these bad habits get pounded into us. ... Read More and so damn pervasively. ask any psychologist.

i dont think such a program would be all that successful, it amounts to a traditional top-down mental violence strategy. how about reducing the pounding of bad habits into children? its much harder to do, and so slow, but the results are self-sustaining, get better with each generation.

not that our species has many generations left.

just my thoughts. dont stop writing!

Ysabelle Vautour at 2:54am July 13

Ok non c etait pas Tony Robbins lol comment que ta realizer sa la?

lol bam! skull tattoo

interesting radio head correlation