

Conflict in Gaza \(Preface\)

Monday, January 12, 2009 at 9:25am

I've been thinking about this for a long time, trying not to respond. I have decided on a way I will: Within the next days, I will write the most pro-Palestinian argument I can, followed by the best pro-Israeli one I can come up with. I think writing at all down will help me feel stronger about whichever side I choose to support in the end.

Best of all, I have friends here that span everywhere from end to end of the scale of opinion on this recent war. I don't expect many responses, but I sure do hope for them.

Now if you'll excuse me, I have classes to attend and drafts to write. Cheers!

Jason Babineau at 2:25pm January 12

it's good, great even, that you intend to look at both sides. but, in the end, do you really have to choose a side? with my limited knowldge of this whole Gaza kerfuffle, I chose no sides.

Coexist, 'site!

be looking forward to your 'arguments'.